HISTORY.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland resolved in 1844 to found a University College which should provide in the North of Ireland a liberal education both in Arts and in Divinity, and shortly afterwards, Mrs. Magee, the widow of a Presbyterian minister, bequeathed £20,000 for the purpose. This bequest was allowed to accumulate, and was augmented by several other benefactions, the most considerable of which was that of the Rev. Richard Dill, who with truth has been styled the real founder of the College. The Honourable the Irish Society also endowed a Professorship in the Arts Department and in many other ways liberally contributed to the funds. After much delay, the College was opened in 1865, and it was accepted in 1879, when the Royal University of Ireland was established, as one of the five recognised Colleges of that University, the others being the Queen's Colleges of Belfast, Cork, and Galway, and the University College, Dublin. On the dissolution of the Royal University in 1909, an arrangement was made with the Board and Council of Trinity College, Dublin, by which students of Magee College could obtain their degrees in Dublin University, and nearly all the members of the Arts Department now graduate there. In the Arts Department the classes and scholarships (except when expressly restricted by the donors) are open to students professing any creed.

OTHER RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS

Candidates for the Ministry of the Methodist Church in Ireland are afforded education and training in the Theological Department of the Methodist College, Belfast; and those desirous of entering the ministry of the Baptist Church have similar provisions made at the Irish Baptist College, 45 Harcourt-street, Dublin

LEGAL EDUCATION.

Each of the Irish Universities confers the degrees of Bachelor of Laws (LL.B.) and Doctor of Laws (LL.D.), but these degrees do not confer upon their holders any right to practise either as a barrister or as a solicitor.

In order to become a Barrister, or, in other words, in order to be called to the Bar, it is necessary—

- (1) To become a student of the Honorable Society of King's Inns, Henrietta-street, Dublin, on the nomination of a Barrister of ten years' standing.
- (2) To attend certain courses of lectures that are delivered by Professors at the King's Inns, with certain other courses of lectures in the Law School, or Faculty of one of the Irish Universities (chosen by the student).
- (3) To keep twelve dining terms in the Dining Hall of the King's Inns, four of which terms may now, at the option of the student, be kept in one of the English Inns of Court; and
- (4) To pass the Final Examination in Law at the King's Inns.

Full information as to the conditions to be fulfilled by those desiring to be called to the Bar may be had on application to the Under-Treasurer, King's Inns, Henrietta-street, Dublin.

In order to be admitted as a Solicitor it is necessary—

- (1) To become apprenticed to a practising Solicitor.
- (2) To attend certain courses of lectures that are delivered by the Professors of the Incorporated Law Society, with certain other courses of lectures in the Law School, or Faculty of one of the Irish Universities (chosen by the apprentice); and
- (3) To pass both the Intermediate and Final Examinations in Law.

Full information as to the conditions to be fulfilled by those desiring to be admitted as a solicitor may be had from the Secretary, Incorporated Law Society, Solicitors' Buildings, Four Courts, Dublin.

MEDICAL EDUCATION.

In all the Irish Universities provision is made for the education and training of those who desire to become practitioners in Medicine, Surgery, and allied professional work, and, upon the fulfilment of certain conditions prescribed in each case as regards attendance at lectures, and at hospitals for treating the various kinds of human ailments and passing the necessary examinations, the Universities grant degrees, licences, and diplomas, which entitle the holder to be registered under the Medical Acts, and to enter at once upon the practice of his or her profession. The Medical Corporations in Ireland that grant licences in Medicine, in Surgery, and in Midwifery are fully dealt with in the MEDICAL DIRECTORY.

OTHER PROFESSIONS.

In the other professions the appropriate University degree may or may not be a passport to professional practice; but, in any case, it is eminently desirable that the hall-mark of a University should be supplemented by a pupillage or an apprenticeship of more or less duration in an establishment where practical experience and training, under experienced and expert supervision, is available.
